July Demo Artist Ric Dentinger

One could say that Ric began his art career at the age of 3, when he would draw for hours on long sheets of paper stretched on the floor. As a contemporary realist with a long history of artistic endeavor, a successful career as an art director and manager of his own design shop, and many awards on his resume, Ric has a great deal to offer us in the July workshop and meeting demonstration. Collectors of his paintings have described them as “Strong, fresh, beautiful and full of light.”

“Watercolor fits my personality because we both have a tendency to drift. In order to produce a desired result I must stay focused. This helps to discipline my natural inclination to wander. I love the impulsiveness of the medium. If you look up the word impulsive in the dictionary it perfectly describes watercolor – impetuous, spontaneous, hasty, passionate, emotional, uninhibited, rash, reckless, foolhardy, whimsical – and that, for me, is its beauty. It has its own life and my challenge has always been to work in tandem with the medium.”

“Whether I’m traveling or working in my studio, I typically paint a subject because of the way it makes me feel. It’s an emotional connection first and foremost.” Ric’s process starts with learning as much as possible about the subject that has attracted him, whether it’s a still life he’s found or created, scenes of architecture, or outdoor scenes composited from photographs he’s taken on location. Drawing is his tool for this learning.

Ric first creates a detailed drawing to work out composition and value concerns before painting.

He says this also “helps to prevent any surprises that might come up while I’m painting.” As he works on this drawing, pulling darks and lights further apart, he usually discovers what compelled him to paint the subject. He next transfers the detailed drawing to watercolor paper (rough cold-pressed 300-lb Arches is his favorite) using a #2 lead pencil, mixes his darkest dark, and starts painting from the center of interest, working outward. When he’s finished with his darkest darks, he lets the painting dry naturally and completely before proceeding. Next, he adds color, form and shape, exaggerating what he has perceived in his reference, using very thick color, working fast, and letting colors mix on the paper to complete the underpainting. Shadows come next, transparent, applied in one pass. The final stage includes more darks, dry brush and spattering techniques for texture, and details; sometimes, Ric uses gouache for certain effects in light and dark areas.

In his CWA workshop, Ric will encourage students to focus on individual style and incorporate new techniques to augment creativity. He will explore color theory, methods of applying paint (including brush strokes, mistake correction, underpainting, flat and graded washes, dry brush effects, wet-in-wet), and design and composition. He will also demonstrate his approach of working from the darks to the lights, his use of jewel-like color, his texturing techniques, and the use of gouache for certain effects. In addition, because Ric is finding that more and more artists are interested in watercolor art board, the CWA workshop will include an art-board project, along with a presentation on its benefits, as well as current limitations.

Check out Ric’s website ricdentinger.com for more about him, his art, and his many awards.

And do plan to join us for Ric’s demonstration at our July meeting; it promises to be an exciting one with many tips on technique.

from the president

Picasso is moving with Van Gogh

In 1930, Detroit Michigan was the fastest growing city in the world. For many years the automobile wealth supported magnificent cultures of the arts. Detroit thrived and so did the residents. The Detroit Institute of Art was a great place to visit and many children started their youth happily admiring the original art of those artists we admire today. A fabulous atrium hall greeted all visitors and flooded their eyes with breath taking 360° views of Diego Rivera murals - clear up to the towering glass ceiling and into the skies above. The murals were created as a dedication to the many people who made Detroit success possible.

Today, the murals still greet the visitors. Picasso, O'Keeffe, Renoir, Matisse, Van Gogh and thousands of original masterpieces still hang waiting for the viewer's curious admiration. I was fortunate to be in Detroit, my hometown, and had time to be a DIA visitor.

Sadly, the financial health of the DIA and all Detroit museums might force the city to sell the collections. Creditors want their investment dollars and selling the famous pieces of art might be the answer. At least, that was the last bit of news a few weeks ago. Let's hope this is not true and other answers will be found. Let's hope this is not the case for your hometown museums. How sad it would be to lose the ability to be a viewer of the arts. This possibility makes it more important to visit art museums.

Fortunately, I also saw positive things happening in Detroit. It will not come back as the same world dominant city but it will survive and thrive in a new way. I now say "good things about Detroit". I predict: Picasso will not move with Van Gogh; thousands of famous artists will retain residence in the DIA; Diego Rivera murals will continue to keep DIA visitors in awe; the people will save the art for the Detroit visitors.

In a few minutes I will visit another art museum, not in my town. Tomorrow I will visit a museum painted by nature, the North Rim of the Grand Canyon. I look forward to the inspiration. I hope your life is filled with visits to a few art museums this summer, inside and out. Thank you to those who support and retain their appreciation of the arts. Art allows everyone to see with fresh eyes. See you at a museum.

Stay inspired,

Karen Powers, CWA President

CWA Outreach

Veterans Like To Learn

At the beginning of May the Recreation Therapy Department at Martinez VA Hospital opened its doors to CWA volunteers for presenting the best of water-color knowledge to the veterans.

The first CWA Outreach class was held on May 1 in the Tahoe Courtyard. I was a lucky visitor of the first session, and had a chance to take a few photos, observe the lesson and chat with the new VA artists. Sheila Cain instructed on the painting of simple and complex color wheels. Victoria Bianco assisted and worked with individuals. The group of veterans was small but they had a great courage and desire to paint. They started with the Big Three: Yellow, Red and Blue colors; and, then, gradually created secondary colors such Green, Orange and Violet. When the first two tasks were accomplished, the students learned what happens when they mix two opposite colors creating rather outstanding grays and blacks.

The second class, which attracted a few new veterans, was held at 9:00am on May 15. The Tahoe Courtyard became an arena for exploring some new materials, which were generously donated by Cheap Joes Art Stuff, www.cheapjoes.com. CWA volunteers presented the lesson covering “basic watercolor strokes” such stamp, stamp+stroke, compound stroke, tip and heal, wet and dry, numbers and letters followed by shape and field. And even though some attendees were skilled painters, they happily used a stroke lesson on the painting of a still life. With the great enthusiasm Sheila and Victoria included the Value vs. Color investigation into the lesson. Using a camera which could change from color to black and white, they compared the values. The beginners and advanced VA students, as well as both instructors all learned and shared the creativity and fun of art.

Painting Under the Influence of the Beautiful Golden Gate Bridge

After reading a couple of artists' blogs, I'd been fretting about how bone-chilling cold it was going to be at Fort Point for the CWA plein air paint out on Saturday, May 18. The wind! Watch out for the wind, they said, not only will your fingers be frozen and your exposed skin be chafed, the wind will take your palette and whip it off your rig into the freezing water below. With this advice in mind, I took heed.

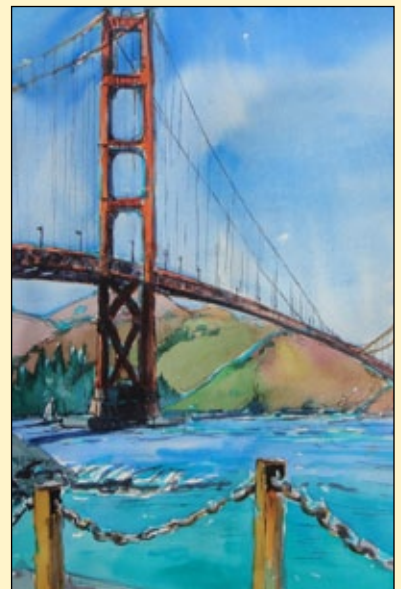

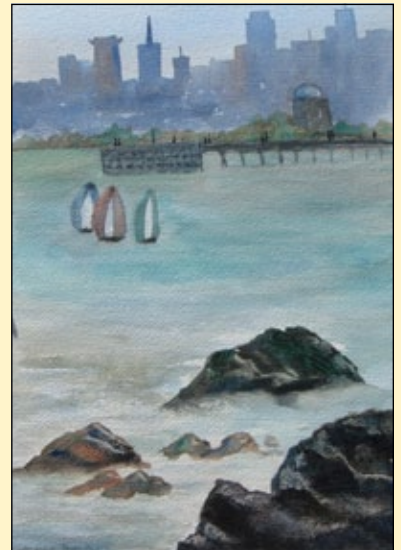

I checked the forecast that morning—overcast, low 60s, windy. The weather was not going to detour me this time. I dug out my thermals, which had already been stored away for the season, and on top of them, layered a tee shirt, a flannel shirt, jeans, and for when I arrived to paint, a fleece vest, fleece jacket, and wind breaker. Fingerless gloves for my hands, and for good measure, a fleece hat and scarf.

Upon arrival, I scoped out a painting locale quite near the point, and hoped that the fort would block some of the wind. But those bloggers were mistaken! Mother Nature had blessed our group with perfect weather. Within 30 minutes, I was wriggling in the car trying to figure out how to discreetly remove my thermals. I hadn't packed my lightweight long-sleeved shirt, so I spent the rest of the four hours taking my flannel shirt on and off. It was an exceptionally gorgeous day, and with my sleeves rolled up, I actually got sunburned on my wrists and hands. From now on, I'll be packing my sunscreen, no matter what the "weather guessers" have to say.

Of the ten of us painting, all but two took on the majesty of the Golden Gate Bridge. It was fun to see the different approaches and humbling to render such an icon, but I think all of us were grateful for such a beautiful day of painting in such a beautiful part of the world. Painters included Andrea Baron, Maria Batkova, Robert Danielson, Donna Gamel, Juanita Hagberg, Theresa Lo, Samantha McNally, Brian Rusnak, Irina Sztukowski, and Georganne Zaro-Eddy.

Join us on July 20 at the UC Berkeley Campus. See details on www.californiawatercolor.org in the plein air section.

The Irvine Museum Presents Mastering The Medium: Works on Paper from The Museum's Collection

June 19-September 19, 2013. The exhibition features a wide selection of works from the museum's collection including drawings, study paintings, watercolors, works in pastel, and etchings. Most of the works were created in the 1920s, 30s, and 40s by important California artists, including Belle Baranceanu (1902-1988), Arthur Beaumont (1890-1978), Paul Grimm (1892-1974), Emil Kosa Jr. (1903-1968), and Norman St. Clair (1863-1912), among others. Some works were created by artists while they were still in art school, and some of the featured study paintings went on to be fully-realized, well-known oil paintings. In addition, the exhibition features a small group of etchings by Henry Chapman Ford from the 1880s depicting the California Missions.
